Welcome continued

We are committed to providing high quality services and following these standards of customer service:

Parent Choice

thread understands each family and child has different care preferences and needs. The information you receive are referrals only; we do not recommend a particular child care program.

Confidentiality

Information received from parents/clients about their family and/or child care needs is used for referral services, research and grant purposes. All personal or identifying information remains confidential. thread does not share or sell mailing lists of client names. For thread's Complaint and Confidentiality Policy, please see page 15.

Commitment to Diversity

thread serves all families and children without bias and does not discriminate because of race, color, national origin, age, sex or disability.

Fee Statement

Child care referral services are free of charge. Each regional thread office is a 501(c)3 organization that accepts charitable contributions. If you are interested in making a tax deductible donation, please visit www.threadalaska.org

Feedback Regarding Services

It is our pleasure to serve you and your family. If you have questions, concerns or would like to give feedback, please contact your regional thread office. Feedback is important to us so we can continue to provide the best services possible.

National Association of Child Care Resource & Referral Agencies (NACCRRA) Quality Assurance

NACCRRA Quality Assurance is a voluntary, national certification program for Child Care Resource and Referral (CCR&R) Agencies. The process guides CCR&R's toward continuous quality assurance and excellence in service delivery. thread family services have been Quality Assured since 2006.

Getting Started in Your Search

Making a decision about an early care and education program is an important one. This decision affects your child's early years and thread is here to help.

Staff at thread customize your child care search according to your location, needs and preferences. You may also visit our website at www.threadalaska.org to get your search for child care started. thread child care referrals include information about programs that may be a good fit for your family's needs. By utilizing the tools in this booklet, you can feel more prepared in knowing what to look for and how to find the right environment for your child. You can begin by calling, visiting, talking with others and preparing your child.

We strongly recommend you call and visit at least three programs before making a decision. You may also contact thread if you need further suggestions or helpful tips for meeting with providers, asking detailed questions, or are in need of more referrals. Following this process increases the likelihood that you will be more satisfied with your choice in child care.

While all referrals are individualized, thread staff offers enhanced referrals for families with unique needs.

Military Enhanced Referrals

thread can assist military families who are searching for child care off base/post. In some cases, a subsidy is available through a partnership with NACCRRA and the Department of Defense. Please contact your local thread office or visit www.naccrra.org/MilitaryPrograms

Alaska IN!

This program is for children with special needs whose family qualifies for and uses the State of Alaska Child Care Assistance Program. The goals of this program are to expand the availability of child care, to increase early identification and intervention, and to provide training and support to child care providers working with children who have special needs. Contact thread and ask to learn more about the Alaska IN! program.

What Quality Care Looks Like

Health and Safety

All regulated early care and education programs are required to meet basic health and safety standards. Some simple things to look for include:

- Children are supervised at all times
- Proper hand washing for children and adults
- Disinfection of materials and classroom areas including diaper changing surfaces
- Staff are trained and able to respond during an emergency
- Medications are labeled and out of the reach of children

A healthy and safe environment will offer both indoor and outdoor space for children and be free from environmental hazards, broken toys or aged equipment. Positive guidance, including the early educator's classroom management techniques and practices, are part of a safe and healthy environment. Positive guidance practices that are focused on teaching children not only support healthy child development but model learned behaviors through adult example and encouragement. Guidance should not be punitive or shaming and never include harsh or physical punishment.

Ratio and Group Size

"Ratio" means how many adults are required to care for children based on their age. When each adult is responsible for fewer children, your child can be provided with more one-on-one attention. This attention is crucial to your child's social and emotional development including how well care givers know your child and plan activities based on his/her learning needs and interests. The term "group size" means the maximum number of children together at any one time. A smaller group size ensures your child will receive one-on-one attention and is part of a group that is easier to manage. Small group sizes are particularly important for young children who need more individual attention and can become overwhelmed in large groups. Ratio and group size guidelines are set by the regulatory agency. Please see page eight and nine of this booklet for more information.

Early Educator Training and Staff Turnover

Staff education is the best predictor of quality in an early care and education program. Adults with training in early childhood education provide higher quality programs for your child, implement more appropriate activities and do a better job of preparing your child for school. An early care and education provider that receives ongoing training related to caring for children ensures they have knowledge of the newest research on how children develop.

Staff turnover can be difficult for children and families because quality early care and education is formed by strong, supportive and respectful relationships. It is important for you to know who is caring for your child, how long they have worked at the program and what type of training or education they have received. Typically a high quality program will have less staff turnover because they are able to pay higher wages, have more teachers with fewer children and provide a supportive adult work environment.

Family Involvement

Quality early care and education programs involve the families of the children enrolled in the program. Programs have the needs of many families to balance, however, as a parent you should always feel welcome in the program, have access to your child and have opportunities to provide input about their care. Well managed programs operate using a set of policies and procedures that include addressing needs and interests of families. This information may be available in a parent handbook. In addition to daily communication, another example of family involvement is parent-teacher conferences. This allows families to visit with the child's provider and focus on the child's individual development and progress. This is also a nice time for families to be involved with the program to create shared plans and goals.

Accreditation

If an early care and education program is accredited by a national organization, this means the program has voluntarily gone above State of Alaska regulatory requirements and meets national levels of quality. National accreditation is a process that typically requires self-study, feedback from families and a visit by an outside organization. More information about accreditation and other types of regulated early care and education programs are listed on page seven of this booklet.

Meeting Your Child's Needs

Choosing a child care program can seem daunting, but using your instincts and knowledge of what's best for your child and family will help you to make the right decision. When choosing a program it is important to take into consideration your child's individual differences and stage of development to find a program that will meet your child's needs.

In general, all children need a consistent schedule and built in opportunities for active and quiet play. Children thrive when they are in environments with interactive teachers, materials and activities. Here are some important things to look for at varying stages of development.

Infants

Infants grow and develop through responsive interactions with their caregivers. This includes cuddling and talking. Their feeding and nap schedule in child care should match their home schedule. Infants need to be held when they are bottle fed. Infants experience their world through their senses. Bright colorful toys that make sounds and have different textures are ideal for infants. Infants put toys in their mouth, as part of learning about their world, so it is important to ensure toys and materials are safe and do not contain parts that are toxic or easily swallowed. Opportunities for indoor and outdoor play should occur daily and infants should be provided with the ability to crawl around and to walk/toddle with appropriate toys and materials.

Toddlers

Toddlers are active and should be provided with ample opportunities to explore their environment through push toys, climbing, sliding and jumping. Toddlers enjoy building, creating and playing pretend. Opportunities for messy play that stimulate the senses are important. Toddlers also like being read to, having opportunities to create with a variety of materials and learn best through hands on activities and interaction.

Preschoolers

Preschoolers are curious and highly interactive with their surrounding world. They like to take things apart and use their imaginations. Preschoolers like to know the "how and why" of things and like to build and make things move. Opportunities for building, putting together, taking apart, messy/sensory stimulating play, pretending, socializing and being active are important.

School-Age Children

Since school-age children have a structured schedule in school all day, they should have many choices for activities after school. The opportunity to play is important. There should be lots of room and equipment for active play, as well as quiet places for reading, painting, doing homework and just being alone. Putting on plays, doing art projects, hands on activities, messy play and cooking are good activities for school-age children.

Types of Regulated Early Care and Education Programs

Accredited Care

All accredited programs ensure the quality of children's daily experiences in early childhood programs and promote positive child outcomes. Accreditation standards are built on evidence-based criteria and represent the following values:

- The uniqueness of childhood as a developmental phase
- The essential contribution to optimal child learning and development of reciprocal, respectful relationships with children and their families
- The distinctive opportunity from birth through kindergarten to support children's intellectual, language and social-emotional development
- The essential role of partnerships with families and communities
- The significance of a strong program infrastructure in providing high-quality care and education
- The importance of the quality of children's lives in the present, not only as preparation for the future

Accredited Child Care Centers

The National Association for the Education of Young Children (NAEYC) Accreditation is a mark of quality. NAEYC Accreditation is a voluntary system by which programs measure themselves against a national set of standards. Accredited programs are high quality programs that follow established criteria which contribute to children's optimal development and learning.

Accredited Family Child Care Homes

The National Association of Family Child Care (NAFCC) Accreditation is the national accreditation system for family child care providers. Accredited homes follow the highest quality and standards for family child care programs across the country.

Licensed Care

Licensed child care programs include child care centers, group homes and family child care homes. They have the following requirements:

- Everyone in the home or program over 16 has had a federal background check
- At least one person with a current CPR and First Aid card is on duty at all times
- Basic health and safety standards are met with annual monitoring visits
- The program agrees to follow the state health and safety standards
- Providers have at least 12 hours of child development training each year for family child care, and at least 20 hours per year for programs caring for more than 8 children
- Specific child to caregiver ratios are followed (see pages 8 and 9)

Approved Care

Approved care is often the first step for someone starting a family child care program and takes place in the provider's home for up to four non-related children. Requirements for approved care state everyone over age 16 in the home has a federal background check, within six months the provider has a current CPR and First Aid card and self-certifies they will follow basic minimum health and safety standards. Approved providers can participate in the Child Care Food Program and accept families on Child Care Assistance. Unless care is for immediate relatives only, the provider has one year to become licensed. A community care license is issued from the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services. A community care license is different from a business license.

The Cost of Child Care

There are many things that affect the cost of child care. For instance, infants and toddlers need more one-on-one time with adults, which may require more staff and smaller groups of children. Other things that affect the cost of child care include:

- The education level of staff and ongoing training needs like First Aid/CPR
- The materials needed to create a safe and exciting learning environment
- Healthy snacks and meals
- The type of program that is offered and/or special features that make it different

Listed below are average regional costs for child care. Rates will vary, please contact individual child care programs for more detailed information. (Averages based on thread database, Spring 2010)

	Is parents' feedback sought and used in making program improvements?
	Will I be given a copy of the program's policies?
	Are annual conferences held with parents?

* These are the adult-to-child ratios and group sizes recommended by the National Association for the Education of Young Children. Ratios are lowered when there are one or more children who may need additional help to fully participate in a program due to a disability, or other factors.

 Group sizes are considered the maximum number of children to be in a group, regardless of the number of adult staff.

 Individuals working in child care can earn a Child Development Associate credential.

Helping Your Child Feel Comfortable in Child Care

Talk with your child

Tell a story about child care and things that might happen there to prepare your child for the routine and schedule. We encourage you to visit the program and spend time there with your child before they begin. Once they have started attending, spend time with your child at the end of the day and ask them about their experience.

Anticipate transition

Stop in and visit the program for a few short visits with your child before they begin care. Goodbyes are important and we encourage you to begin a routine during drop-off and pick-up times. Sneaking away, even if your child is upset, is not as effective as saying goodbye and letting your child know when you will be back. Starting care is a big family event; try to avoid other major changes in your child's life when they begin care.

Build a relationship with your provider

Take time to share information about your child and family and get to know the teachers at your program. If concerns arise, talk about them right away. It is easier to problem-solve when open communication is established. Your involvement in the program helps to build a strong connection between you and your child's program.

Be a part of your child's care

If your child seems happy and cheerful, chances are that everything is fine. Consistency in your child's care is important and we encourage you to be active in making sure your child is in a positive, stable environment. You can make visits to the program, volunteer, establish a positive relationship with the teachers and talk with your child frequently about their experiences. Frequent change can be difficult for children. We suggest you watch for signs including high staff turnover or unfamiliar adults, harsh and cold behavior towards the children, not enough supervision, unexplained injuries or changes in your child's mood or attitude. If you are unable to resolve your concerns with your provider, if your concerns are serious or if you suspect your child is being abused or neglected in any way, contact your local Child Care Licensing office whose numbers are provided on page 15 of this booklet.

Checking on Your Child's Care

Questions or Concerns about Child Care Providers

By spending time at the facility and talking to your child about their experience in care, you are investing in your child care program and building a stronger relationship with the provider. This relationship of open communication can help the child care program and teachers better meet your family's needs. Parents who have built a relationship with their providers often find it more comfortable to address concerns with them directly.

However, if you have a concern about a provider that is unresolved, we strongly encourage you to contact one of the regional licensing offices listed on this page. You are the ultimate advocate for your child's care, and if your voice is not heard, the concern may not be addressed.

Licensing specialists will investigate complaints received about child care providers and document the findings. Information on completed complaint investigations is part of the public file and available for viewing. It will be the parent's responsibility to continue checking on the status or outcome of a complaint.

thread Complaint and Confidentiality Policy

thread representatives will respond to concerns responsibly and fairly. While we do not directly investigate complaints received, we provide confidential documentation of all complaints and forward them to the appropriate agency. Any information that we receive from parents about their child care needs is entered into our database and is used for referral services, research and grant purposes. All personal or identifying information will remain confidential unless otherwise authorized. thread does not share or sell mailing lists or parent names with the public. Please contact your local thread office if you need further information regarding these policies.
